The only times that the familiar motto, "God Bless Our Home," could be placed on view in the apartments of Mrs. Edward Gaffney, No. 349 Manhattan avenue, Williamsburg, during the last quarter of a century were during the intervals that her savage husband was in jail for beating her.

And according to Magistrate O'Reilly, of the Ewen Street Court, Williamsburg, the history of criminology does not record a case of more persistent brutality than is contained in the married career of this same Gaffney, who was arraigned before him yesterday for knocking his wife 1) 1, Nine Spot (10 to 1) 2, Unter-

As Gaffney was led from before Magistrate O'Reilly to the prison pen he turned to the Court and said: "I hope she dies before Monday. If she M. doesn't I will kill her for sure at my first opportunity."
